

Coriolis emerges from the dialogue of the work of Pedro Cerisola, specifically his collection CÚMULOS and the material discourse of Luisa Restrepo.

A different approach to Cerisola's geometric structures is accomplished through this collaboration. Taking it first to a two-dimensional plane and emphasizing on its graphic potential and eventually bringing it back to a three dimensional arrangement. Luisa Restrepo's mastery in the processes of working with glass allowed this geometry to be reinterpreted giving it a different rhythm where strict symmetry is broken the repetition remains, transforming geometric rigor into a loose organic flow.

Coriolis is conformed of six pieces, each one is made of manually fused glass, cut digitally with waterjet technology and sandblasted manually.
